*As I have been reading Bob Goff's newest book, Everybody Always, I realized it is something I want to incorporate into my classroom. Not just incorporate the ideas of loving everybody, always, in the way I teach but also to use the actual words in the book to inspire my students. My overarching goal in teaching is to help my students see things from other perspectives. I want them to leave my classroom each day, each year, each graduation, with a more innate ability to see things from someone else's perspective and to become more compassionate people because of it. This is why I love history, it is all about different perspectives. Perspectives we don't always understand because there aren't enough primary sources or because of the natural bias with which history is told. I want them to learn to see other cultures, other people, the way that God sees them and to love everybody, always because that is exactly what Jesus came to earth and did.
